Good Morning Cindi,

I hope you're well. It's been a while since we chatted. We're still looking into the Cook Inlet exemption in the Coastal ELG and one question raised by folks in Seattle concerned Furie's Kitchen Lights operation. Specifically, there were questions about the handling of the drilling fluids/cuttings/muds generated by the four exploration wells Furie drilled between 2011 and 2013. Do you know how those wastes were handled? I talked with Chris Wallace and he told me that, according to Furie's Plan of Operations, all of those wastes were to have been either deep well disposed or landfilled at the Kenai Borough landfill. However, he told me that he didn't know if that was what, in fact, happened and suggested I check in with you.

In the meantime, Hanh is pulling together local studies of impacts on fishing stocks. The question of environmental damage from Cook Inlet O&G operations is a persistent one here in DC and we don't have a great handle on it. We'll see what she turns up.

Many thanks for any info you can share!

Ahmar
